

Recyca's move to the future!

Belgium based cartridge collector Recyca has announced its move to a new warehouse. With this move Recyca has quadrupled its total warehouse surface ensuring enough space for the years to come.

The move included a brand new inkjet test facility with the latest state of the art testing equipment. Furthermore, Recyca took the necessary steps to drastically lower its waste output. "With help of custom built machines we strive for a 'zero waste working environment' within Recyca," said Mike van der Weyde, owner of Recyca.

Recyca urgently needed to expand as both its local and global business has expanded significantly. "This year we realised tremendous growth with our successful nationwide collection programmes on the cartridge collection part of our company," explained Dimitry van Raamsdonk. "Together with the international growth of our empty cartridge sales we had to make this decision in order to prepare ourselves for the future growth of Recyca.

"We are pleased that the move did not affect our clients. At Recyca we were committed to moving our facility without losing shipping time or missing an order. Our goal was to make the move as transparent as possible to our customers. Many of them supported us and were actually very interested in the progress we made."

"At Recyca we are convinced that this move will increase Recyca's productivity, order accuracy and response time to customers" said Mike van der Weyde. "Of course visitors are more than welcome to come and see our new facility."
